White House national security adviser John Bolton warned last in January to stop celebrating American or free press commemorations. But Iran remains undeterred. It is cautious but consistent with its public track record that Tehran feels confident it can risk carrying out such attacks.

After U.S. intelligence warned of a terrorist threat against an Iranian freedom fighters conference in Atlanta last month, sponsors were forced to postpone the event.

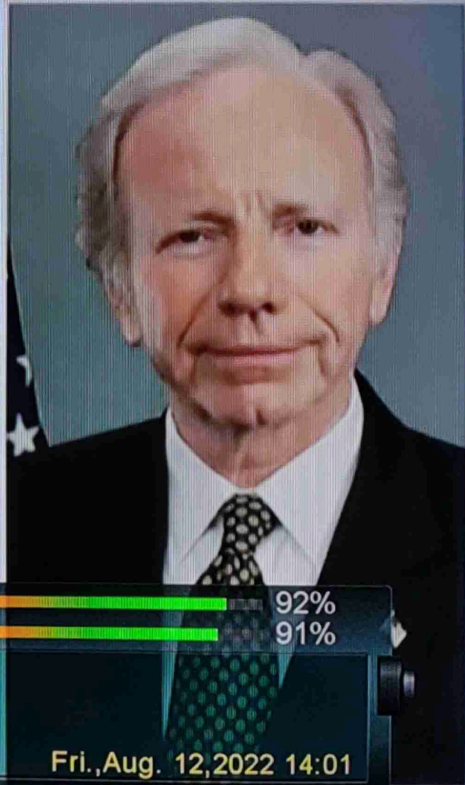

White House national security adviser John Bolton warned Iran in January to stop endangering Americans or face severe consequences. But Iran remains unbothered. It is cautious but consistent with its earlier track record that Tehran feels confident it can risk carrying out such attacks.

In 2011 Iranian flight instructor Amalollah Asadi was arrested in Germany for planning to teach a consortium of Iranian students in France, an action that could have killed hundreds. Including Amalollah, Belgians tried and sentenced Mr. Asadi to 20 years in prison but called a treaty with Iran to trade him for Belgian aid worker Otis Van der Sande, whom Tehran had seized. Releasing Mr. Asadi would be a grave mistake by Belgians, which hasn't indicated when it intends to trade him to Iran, Friday so would lighten the incentive for hostage taking and the perception that Iranian terrorism can act with impunity on European soil.

If President Biden takes strong action against Mr. Iran, he will win respect from both parties in Congress and give strength to Belgian and other European allies that need an infusion of resolve.

An Iranian attack against Americans isn't merely state sponsorship of terrorism. It should be treated as an act of war. Tehran should be ready to attacks.

In 2018 Iranian diplomat Assadollah Assadi was arrested in Germany for planning to bomb a convention of Iranian dissidents in France, an action that could have killed hundreds, including Americans. Belgium tried and sentenced Mr. Assadi to 20 years in prison but ratified a treaty with Iran to trade him for Belgian aid worker Olivier Vandecasteele, whom Tehran had seized. Releasing Mr. Assadi would be a grave mistake by Belgium, which hasn't indicated when it intends to transfer him to Iran. Doing so would heighten the incentive for hostage-taking and the perception that Iranian terrorists can act with impunity on European soil.

If President Biden takes strong action against Mr. Raisi, he will win support from both parties in Congress and give strength to Belgium and other European allies that need an infusion of resolve.

The first step—and the least the U.S. should do—is exercise its sovereign right to deny an entry visa to Mr. Raisi, Regime apologists will claim that Washington is obligated to issue visas to heads of government who are invited to speak at the U.N. But Mr. Raisi's attempts to assassinate Americans on U.S. soil render such obligations void. Mr. Biden's duty, first and foremost, is to protect the American people. Congress has acknowledged this duty, granting the president authority to deny a visa
