At grave risk of execution

Mohammad Ghobadlou is at grave risk of execution after the Supreme Court upheld his conviction and death sentence on 2 January 2023. He was sentenced to death for "spreading corruption on earth" ...
... after a fast tracked, grossly unfair sham trial before a Revolutionary Court in Tehran. The prosecution relied on torture tainted "confessions" to convict him of running over officials with a car, killing one and injuring others.

Mohammad Ghobadlou was also tried before a criminal court in Tehran on charges stemming from the same alleged acts, in contravention of the protection against double jeopardy. If convicted, he could receive a second death sentence.

It is abhorrent that the Iranian authorities persist in their state-sanctioned killing spree as they desperately seek to end the protests and cling to power by instilling fear among the public.

No adequate examinations of Mohammad Ghobadlou's mental health were conducted by the authorities and his mother has stated that he is being denied medication for his mental health condition in prison. On 29 December 2022, a group of psychiatrists published an open letter to the head of judiciary urging a closer examination of his mental health and its possible impact on his ability to exercise judgement.

Mohammad Ghobadlou's lawyer has filed a request for a judicial review of his case before the Supreme Court, which remains pending.

Executed after unfair sham trials

On 5 December 2022, a Revolutionary Court in Alborz province sentenced Mohammad Mehdi Karami and Seyed Mohammad Hosseini to death in a grossly unfair sham trial. They were also convicted of "spreading corruption on earth" (efsad-e fel arz) over the death of a Basij paramilitary agent during a protest on 3 November 2022.

The court convicted and sentenced them to death less than a week after the trial began on 30 November 2022. Before trial, state media aired their forced "confessions" and described them as "murderers", violating their right to presumption of innocence. Both were also denied access to lawyers of their own choosing.

Seyed Mohammad Hosseini subsequently revealed to his lawyer that the authorities forced him to "confess" under torture and other ill-treatment, such as kicking him until he lost consciousness, beating him on the soles of his feet with iron rods, and using electric shocks all over his body.

Their executions, which took place just two months after their arrests, were each carried out in secret and without prior notice to their lawyers and families.

Scores of protesters at risk

Amnesty International fears that scores of others face the death penalty in connection with protests, given that thousands of people have been arbitrarily arrested and indicted since protests erupted. They include Mohammad Boroughani, who was sentenced to death by a Revolutionary Court in Tehran for "enmity against God" (moharebeh). He was convicted of allegedly wielding a machete, setting fire to the governor's residence and killing a police officer on 24 December. The Supreme Court upheld his conviction and death sentence. The Office of Public Relations of Iran's Supreme Court announced on Twitter that Mohammad Boroughani's death sentence has been suspended pending the outcome of a judicial review by the Supreme Court. Others at risk also include Arshia Takrestan, Javad Roshdi, Manouchehr Meliman Navaz, Saleh
