Hello Again

Steve Jobs says the cool new iMac he unveiled last week is only the latest sign of a freshly polished Apple. BY STEVEN LEVY

LOOK AT THAT! SAYS STEVE JOBS as he pulls his Mercedes into a parking space. He's pointing at a new Volkswagen Beetle, and as soon as he parks, he dashes over, circling the shiny black Bug, taking the measure of a well-publicized update of one of his great product designs. "They got it right," he concludes. Last Wednesday Jobs himself received a most thunderous thumbs-up at the announcement of Apple Computer's success at its own hall-of-fame Lunie, the original Macintosh, a machine designed for

Ten months ago, when 43-year-old Jobs temporarily assumed control of the company he cofounded in a garage in 1977, the move was widely seen as a last-ditch effort to inject excitement into a barely breathing corporate beast. Maybe Jobs could weave his famous "reality-distortion field" and preserve enough interest for some bigger, edgier to snap Apple up at a face-saving price. But now strange words are emerging from One Infinite Loop, the glass-walled Cupertino headquarters. Words like profit. Stability. And even, if you strain to hear, growth. For the first time in years, the face

It's his baby: Jobs cradles Apple's latest creation, the iMac
